Abilities: Levitate

Eon geminae foemina (Latias)

Egg Group: Unknown

Eon geminae masculus (Latios)

Also known as the "Eon Twins", Latios and Latias are a mysterious pair who are male and female counterparts to each other respectively. They are both highly sensitive to emotions, do not like fighting, and are notoriously shy. Latios are capable of Sight Sharing, and Latias are capable of telepathy and shapeshifting. The bond between a set of Lati@s twins is unbreakable. Both are capable of invisibility by using their glass-like downy feathers to refract light away from themselves. At maximum speed, Eon geminae are able to move at speeds faster than jet planes, but this is difficult to achieve and highly energy consumptive.

Latios and Latias are both capable of mega evolution.

Fun fact: Should one be born shiny, the other is too.

Divinity: Eon geminae are minor demigods with an unknown divine ancestry. Their divinity presents itself uniquely amongst the minor demigods, a combination of traits that include invisibility, shapeshifting into humans, understanding human speech, telepathy, all eggs guaranteed to birth opposite-sexed twins with an unbreakable psychic bond, heightened powers (see: base stat information), "Sight Sharing", and turning into Soul Dews upon death (see: Mythology & Mystical Items). In exchange for all these cool powers and abilities, Eon geminae are completely and entirely mortal with the same life expectancy as human beings.

Sight Sharing: An ability where one twin is able to transmit whatever it sees directly to its other twin, and the receiver can in turn project those visions externally if it so desires. Lati@s are also able to develop this connection with others, but they are selective with who they choose to open their hearts to in such a way. In the heat of violent conflict, however, the individual may choose to use this power in self-defense and inflict visions upon its enemy.

Habitat: Latios and Latias are found all over the world. They prefer living near water. Interestingly, they seem to really like human cities that are on or next to water.

Life Cycle: They have the same life expectancy as a human.

A pair of Lati@s are born from the same egg, a phenomenon that occurs very rarely in the Pokémon world. They are guaranteed to hatch one of each, and the twins share unbreakable bond with each other.

Eon geminae reach reproductive maturity at the same level as all other Pokémon, but they do have to be at least two years old. They can only mate with other Eon geminae and, of course, Mews. Courtship tends to occur over the course of a couple years, where the two usually stay together anywhere from a few years to life (like humans, they have complicated relationships with others of their kind). Eggs are laid in the summer every 7 to 12 years, where the parents vigorously defend their single egg until they hatch in the Spring. Newborns are more likely to die from accidentally getting caught in traps (spider webs, etc.), while adults are more likely to die from conflicts with other Pokémon or humans, if not through age. Their ability to turn themselves invisible prevents death, allowing the species as a whole to live complete lives with minimal fear of predation or death. In consequence, they do not reproduce quickly, and any given individual will usually only care for around 3 to 5 eggs in their life time.

Importantly: Twins are magically unable to reproduce with each other.

Behavior: They are typically shy individuals, particularly around humans, but they adore playtime and mischief. When they're in danger, they emit a shrill scream! They're highly sensitive to others' emotions, and they like those who are good of heart. But they will disappear if they sense enemies.

Eon geminae live in small herds of 3 to 10 other individuals. Twins and mates are typically in the same herd. Orphaned babies will be adopted by the rest of the herd.

In the unfortunate event that one of the twins in a pair die, the other becomes incredibly and incurably depressed. When this happens, their herd tries to cheer them up, but tragically the heartbreak of it frequently leads to premature death in the remaining twin.

Diet: They really enjoy eating fruits, nuts, vegetables, bread, potato chips, and the sorts.

Conservation: Unknown. There is estimated to be around 10,000 total of Eon geminae.

Relationship with Humans: Eon geminae have a long relationship with humans, with many cultures thinking of them as spirits, others as mischievous fae, others revere them as protectors, and so forth. Because they are able to transform into humans, there are individuals who spend large swaths of time freely living amongst humanity. Interestingly, Latios and Latias herds seem to really enjoy living in human settlements that are on or next to the water, and such cities have a decent chance of housing E. geminae herds at least sometimes during the year, but sightings are limited given the whole invisibility and shapeshifting thing.

Every so often, trainers and rangers get lucky and are able to capture a Latios or Latias! But they are incredibly difficult Pokemon to track down and find, let alone capture. One of the ultimate tests of a trainer's skill, if there ever was one!

They enjoy playing with children.

Venice, Italy is most famous for its wild Latios and Latias sightings, as herds migrate in and out of the city all year round. Tourists enjoy trying to spot them, and even scientists will travel to Venice with the intent of trying to research the elusive Eon geminae. It's hypothesized that at any given time, there are at least 20 Lati@s hanging around Venice, Italy.

Classification: They are hypothesized to possibly be descendants of Mesprit (the Emotion Pokémon) and Mew, but in truth nobody has any clear notion of where these twins come from. The most scientists have been able to gather from genetic tests and molecular analysis of the feathers, is that they are mostly definitely related to the rest of the Tetrapods in the Animal Kingdom – which means very little, and is about as much information as one could have derived from just looking at them. They do not seem to bare any close relationship to any living Pokémon, except Mew of course.
